BUTLER AND BLAINE.

The Man from Massachusetts Wants to See the Law.

Special to the Times-Democrat.

New York, Nov. 29.—Gov. Butler, of Massachusetts, who spent Thanksgiving Day in this city, said to-day, in regard to Blaine's letter: "Now, Mr. Blaine proposes to collect a large amount of direct taxes from a few States, and distribute the money among all the people of all the States per capita. I hope before that is attempted somebody will show the constitutional warrant for so doing. That is to say, to give you an illustration; some millions are to be collected from Virginia tobacco, in order to pay the taxes of Minnesota; other millions are to be collected off of the corn which is used to make whisky in Kentucky to pay the taxes in Massachusetts. Now, I know of no warrant in the constitution for taxing a man who produces a blade of tobacco any more than a man who produces a blade of grass, nor for a tax on a bushel of corn made into whisky any more than a bushel of corn made into meal.

"There is a difference in sentiment about whisky and tobacco, but no difference in constitutional law so far as I know. A man has as much constitutional right to make whisky free of taxation as he has to make bread, or to make tobacco free of taxation, or to make cotton cloth free of taxation.

"I have always looked upon the tax upon whisky and tobacco as a great injustice to the States that produce those articles. Not that they may not ultimately get the taxes back, after their produce is sold, but for the effect upon the producers. We tax Virginia upon her great products, from which alone she can realize money, up to the collection point, leaving her nothing of her State industry to put a tax upon; and then we complain of her because she does not pay her own debt. Well, Mr. Blaine proposes to keep that tax on and pay other people's debts with it. In my judgment, if anything would justify rebellion that would. My plan is to abolish the tax upon whisky and tobacco by the United States, when it is no longer necessary to help the middle interest, for the same reason that the tax on matches was taken off for the benefit of the poorer interest, and the tax on bank checks for the capital class.

"I agree fully that whiskey and tobacco should be taxed by the States alone, and not by the General Government, except in time of dire necessity, which knows no law; and I am quite certain that the constitution of the United States neither directs, authorizes nor permits any tax upon its people, direct or indirect, except what is necessary to meet the proper expense of its own government, and for the expense of governing the States."

SPEAKER CARLISLE.

That is to be His Title for the Next Two Years—He Was Nominated on the First Ballot

By a Vote of 106, to 52 for Randall and 30 for Cox.

Special to the Appeal.

WASHINGTON, December 1.—As foreshadowed in the dispatches during the last three days, Mr. Carlisle was nominated by the Democratic caucus on the first ballot for Speaker of the House. To his confidential friends Mr. Randall gave up the fight at an early hour this morning, but he continued the fight up to the last moment. His only hope lay in the defeat of the mention to vote viva voce, by which he hoped that a considerable number of Carlisle men might be induced to cast their votes for him. But this hope was dashed to pieces by the first action of the caucus, which resolved, by a vote of 102 to 75, to take the vote viva voce. Mr. Randall was in one of the committee-rooms, and when the news of this vote was taken to him, he said, "CARLISLE IS ELECTED."

The caucus, after settling the matter, proceeded at once to business. Randall was put in nomination by Ementrout, of Pennsylvania, Carlisle by Blackburn, of Kentucky, and Cox by Slocum, of New York. The first ballot resulted—Carlisle, 106, Randall 52, Cox 30. Tremendous enthusiasm followed this announcement. The Kentuckians who were gathered in the lobbies went fairly wild.

MR. CARLISLE WAS VISIBLY AGITATED. He trembled all over, and appeared more like a man confronted by a terrible calamity than one flushed with a brilliant victory. Randall, for the first time, manifested some feeling, and for a moment was greatly dejected. He quickly rallied, however, and accompanied by Ex Gov. Curtin, proceeded to Carlisle's room and offered his congratulations. Carlisle was then escorted by Randall, Cox and Curtin to the caucus-room, where he made a speech that was loudly applauded.

OTHER OFFICERS.

For clerk of the House, the first vote resulted: Clark, of Missouri, 92; Atkins, of Tennessee, 91; Martin, of Delaware, 6. The second ballot was the same. On the third ballot Clark received 95, Atkins 92, Martin 2, electing Clark.

Leaden, of Ohio, was elected sergeant-at-arms by acclamation.

Wintersmith, of Texas, was elected door keeper, defeating Field, of Georgia, and Oell, of Connecticut.

Dalton, of Indiana, was elected postmaster.

The law library at Jackson, Miss., is the largest in the South and the fourth in all America.

It is related of Daniel Webster, the greatest of American orators, that when he had completed his collegiate course, he asked for a diploma, which he thought he deserved, but the Professors thought differently. After some delay and much hesitation they gave it to him. But Webster, not feeling inclined to take what was so reluctantly given, handed back the diploma saying as he did so, "you shall hear from Daniel Webster again."—Ex.

And he was heard from again.

Hon. Francis A. Wolf is a candidate for Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. He is the hero of two wars, "the back woods philosopher of Tipton," whom his fellow citizens have delighted to honor. We hope he will be unanimously elected. —Ashland Register.

ALL the District Attorneys elected in Mississippi are Democrats save one.

The Yazoo Sentinel publishes below two exquisite "gems of poetry," written by Mrs. Harriet N. Prewitt and published in the Yazoo Banner. They are not excelled by any like poems in the English language:

REST.

What is the thing for which I pray,
Through sleepless nights and weary day?
The good of God's gifts the best;
It is not wealth nor fame—but REST.

Oh! in the fret and race of life,
Beset with care and bitter strife,
How oft, with sin and care oppress'd,
The weary pilgrim sighs for Rest.

The rest that to the just is given
The long, long Sabbath day of Heaven,
Beyond the fields of moon or star,
Where wicked spirits cease to war.

Our thoughts o'er the world's wilderness
Go out in search of happiness,
But, like the deluge dove's, our quest,
Is fruitless and we find no Rest.

The race for fame, the toil for gold,
At last, are like a tale oft told;
An aching void is in the breast,
That craves no happiness, but Rest.

The mid day sun is all too bright,
For fading eyes that shun the light;
But when in gold and crimson West,
On gorgeous couch he sinks to rest.

How sweetly comes with soothing power,
That quiet time, the twilight hour,
To troubled mortals welcome guest,
As harbinger of night and rest.

Methinks the joys of Heaven would pall,
If golden streets and sapphire wall,
And white winged seraphs round the throne,
Were all the eye would rest upon.

To me, the fields of living green,
With the pure river's course between,
Gives even to Heaven its greatest zest,
As place of perfect peace and rest.

For rapt and holy seraphim
Be golden harp and endless hymn;
They never knew Time's fleeting breath,
The toil of life or pang of death.

Let the ecstatic joys of Heaven,
To high and happy souls be given;
Enough for me the dear belief,
Of pardoned sins and perfect Rest.

"IN MY FLESH I SHALL SEE GOD."
Job.

By the promise that He giveth,
Know I my Redeemer liveth—
Beyond the power of death—
Not with hands and feet all bleeding.

For his cruel murderers pleading;
But with a starry crown supernal,
On His Father's throne eternal,
With my own enraptured vision
I shall see that sight clysian.

I shall see Him in His glory,
While rapt tongues shall tell the story
Of his dear redeeming love,
I shall see him face to face
In that holy, happy place—
Though corruption and the worm
Destroy this mortal form,
Till it moulders in the sod,
In my flesh shall I see God.

No more of pain and anguish,
No more in want to languish,
Broken-hearted and alone;
In that world of perfect bliss,
I shall see him as he is.
When the sting of death is o'er—
And can part us never more—
With these worn and weary feet,
I shall walk the golden street.

O, the joy of such a meeting,
O, the rapture of the greeting,
With the loved ones gone before.
How we missed them when they left us;
How we wept when God bereft us;
Blindly questioning his right,
From our life to take the light,
Headless that the blow was given,
To lead us up to Heaven.

I shall see Him in his glory,
And shall sing the wondrous story
Of his dear redeeming love
Close by the shining river;
I shall rest from pain forever,
When life's weary race is run
As a hireling's work is done.
Through the dear Redeemer's grace,
I shall see God face to face.

The demand for public lands in Mississippi is unprecedented.
